CURRENT HISTORY.

The Congressional Library to Make a

Feature of Its Newspaper Collection. The Congressional Library is now devoting far more attention to the collection of periodicals than at any time in its history. While the big storehouse of books was housed in cramped quarters in the Capitol ambitious projects of many kinds were impossible to carry out, but with the extensive facilities for preserving printed matter now enjoyed many plans for the enrichment of the library can be realized. Among the plans that Librarian Putnam has provided to the plans that the for is a more complete record of occurrences from day to day, to be found only in the newspapers. When the library was in the Capitol only fifty newspapers were filed and bound. Now this number has been increased until 500 periodicals of various kinds are being received and made a part of the library. Nine-tenths of these period-icals are contributed by the publishers, and an effort has been made to have all of them given to the government free of charge, and it is believed that some time in future the library will be relieved from all overse the library will be relieved from all expense from the purchase of magazines and newspapers. Publishers are naturally anxions to have their papers find a permanent home among the big collection of books, and those who contribute their publication have the satisfaction of knowing that they are substantially bound and made available for substantially bound and made available for reference at all times. The periodical de-partment, under the charge of Mr. Alian B. Slauson, has been expanded probably more than any other department of the library during the last two years.

during the last two years.

The value of newspapers as a record of the events of the times has not been fully recognized by libraries of the country in the past, but there is a general awakening now to an appreciation of their value. For many years the Congressional Library kept only the great newspapers of the country, and these papers devoted most of their space to national and state affairs, and the doings of the large cities. The limited number of papers kept made it impossible to have this newspaper record properly cover all sections of the country, which is now being done, so that a most valuable record of events and comments on current topics is being good. now being gone, so that a most variable record of events and comments on current topics is being accumulated to an extent that will cause the Congressional Library to far surpass every other institution of the wind in this department.

Within a short time a special room for periodicals will be opened to the public, where all of these 500 newspapers will be kept on file from day to day, and where they may be consulted at any time.

The fielding of all three teams was of the loose order, the post office boys los-ing their game in the first inning through errors. In the second game both teams played miserably, but the errors of the "Hams" were more costly. The pitching of er support closer and smaller scores would have resulted. Preparations of the Government for Making a Complete Census.

The census office is sending out a large number of letters and circulars intended to perfect the work of making a complete census of dairy products.

Hitherto the annual change of managers, owners and directors which takes place in so many cheese factories and creameries has rendered practically impossible the work of securing accurate dairy statistics. As this is the season during which factories and creameries close up the year's business Director Merriam suggests that before doing so they prepare a detailed statement of the quantity of milk or cream purchased and the amount paid for it; the amount of butter or cheese produced; the amounts received from the sales of each; the amount of capital invested in plant and machinery and the amount paid for wages, etc. The items should be varied properly to fit cases where factories or creameries

As these statistics, which must cover the year 1800, will not be gathered by the enumerators until June 1, 1900, the director stated, in an interview today, that he Pennsylvania base ball team held a conference with Arthur Irwin, manager of the Washington team, yesterday, and Irwin was

BRITISH PLAN OF CAMPAIGN. How the Troops Will Proceed to Meet

From the New York Tribune. A press dispatch purports to give some details of the British plan of campaign in South Africa, relating to the place of landing troops and the line of advance upon the Boers. According to this announcement, the troops about to start for South Africa will not be landed at Cape Town nor at Durban, but in the neighborhood of Algoa bay-to wit, at Port Elizabeth, Port Alfred and East London. The reason given is that Cape Town and Durban are already overcrowded with refugees. That is doubtless true. But there are other reasons.

Cape Town is too far from the seat of war. It is 575 miles from Cape Town to the frontier on the Orange river, and 1,040 miles to Pretoria. And the railroad at and beyond the Orange river has been destroyed by the Boers. Durban is nearest of all to the seat of war. It is only 189 miles from Ladysmith and 511 from Part for the rough.

lt is only 180 miles from Ladysmith and 511 from Pretoria. But to get from it through Natal into either the Orange State or the Transvaal it is necessary to cross the steep and lofty Drakensberg, the passes of which are already in the hands of the Boers.

There remains the third course, by way of the Algoa bay route. One railroad runs from Port Elizabeth right up to Bloemfontein and Pretoria, with a branch to De Aar on the Cape Town-Kimberley-Buluwayo line. Another runs from East London up to the Port Elizabeth line just beyond the Orange river, with a branch from Burghersdorp to Aliwal North, on the Orange frontier. And a third runs from Port Alfred (formerly Barthurst) between these two, connecting with them both, at Rosmead and at Stormberg. Here, then, are three railroad lines, all in British hands, ready to convey troops straight to the ready to convey troops straight to the Orange frontier at three points, Norval's Pont, 328 miles; Bethulie, 320 miles, and Aliwal North, 300 miles from the coast. Aliwal North, 300 miles from the coast.

From those points the advance will be easy. There will be no Drakensberg to cross, but only the Orange river. Then they will be on the open plains of the Orange State with Bloemfontein only 125 miles away, and Pretoria 200 miles beyond. An advance in that direction would give the British their count wholes of ground for fighting was own choice of ground for fighting upon. And it would in the surest and quickest manner compel the Boers to call in their troops from Natal and Bechuanaland and Griqualand for the defense of their own capitals. If this shall indeed prove to be the British plan, as now seems most prob-able, the Orange alliance will prove to be a serious handicap to the Transvaal, inasmuch as it will open the easiest and direct-est road from the coast to Pretoria. Had the Orange State remained neutral Sir Red-vers. Buller would have had to fight his way over the Drakensberg or up the long road through Griqualand, and then give battle on the Boer's chosen ground. In casting in its lot with the Transvaal the Orange Free State her feellisted the min

JOSIAH R. ADAMS DECLINES, He Was Republican Nominee for

Judge in Philadelphia. Josiah R. Adams, the republican nominee for judge of the superior court in Philadelphia, has declined the nomination, and his place on the ticket will be filled by the republican state committee. The letter in which Mr. Adams withdraws from the campaign is as follows: PHILADELPHIA, October 18, 1899. Gen. Frank Reeder, Chairman Republican State Committee:

My Dear Sir: The honor of the nomination for superior court judge came to me, as you know, unsought and unexpected. I accepted that nomination with the greatest pride. The emoluments of the office were no inducement to me, but the opportunity of single devotion to a beloved profession and the honor of high office were extremely alluring. I have been attacked by political opponents and have arswered the attack in the only way that the best friendly, professional and political advisers deemed adequate. I can, before election day, in no further way, diminish the effect of that attack which must, therefore, influence voters adversely to the party ticket if I remain thereon

I have no right to let my own ambition impede my party's success, and while I have no doubt of election if I stand, I should not enjoy victory by a lessened party vote, nor could I endure a judicial seat in any court whose humblest suitor at seat in any court whose numblest suitor at the bar doubted my integrity.

I therefore decline the nomination for judge of the superior court.

Very respectfully,

JOSIAH R. ADAMS.

who are forecasting the results of a war in the Transvaal are laying entirely too much stress on the marksmanship of the Boers," said E. A. Broughton of Liverpool. "I have a brother at Port Natal, and during a visit which I paid him in 1896 I saw a good deal of fancy shooting, both at Pretoria and at Bloemfontein, in the Orange Free State. I also heard numerous hunting stories, and in every instance the tradition far outclassed the performance. I dare say the original Boer settlers were fine shots when their weapons are taken fine shots when their weapons are taken a rock or hummock, and science is bo into consideration. reled German rifle of about forty-four cali-ber. For anything like long range they had to push up the sights, and they became very expert at judging distance for drop shots. Their skill in that particular gave them a great advantage over noted English sportsmen who came into the country after big game, and they acquired a tremendous reputation as marksmen. I am confident that the average British 'Tommy' could double discount them with a modern small-caliber, high-power rifle, and, as far as I saw, the younger Boers are very indifferent shots with any sort of weapon. Another thing that has given a false idea of Boer prowess is the fact that their early skirmish fighting was so effec-
